

W. W. and Courier

BY BOUTELLE BROTHERS.

Amidst the scenes should be addressed to the public and the commandments made to the publication should be addressed "Editor and Owner."

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1897.

An Unhappy Family.

The anti-Republican organization will enter the campaign this year in a thoroughly demoralized condition. The rapid decline in the price of silver while it still lingers toward the dollar mark is, perhaps, the work of their trouble, as it has completely upset all their previous arguments; but it is accompanied by other difficulties. The Bryanites are hopelessly divided. One State's conservative element desire to keep the Chicago platform in the background in the interest of party unity, but is another anything short of the most specific declaration in support of said platform is denounced as treachery. Then there are the fusionists and anti-fusionists, who are engaged to-day in publishing the most uncompromising remarks about each other. The so-called silver Republicans, or at least some of them, seem to be disgusted with their former party associates as will be seen on the following consecutive columns of the Denver Republican.

Populists want to accomplish "any and all" of the following: to re-establish the strict, fair and orderly party organization and re-rotate the leadership of such blathering and jibbering as is now and was, and Coxey and his crew to act as public leaders and to re-duce a majority of the American people to submit to the government to known and secret masters. The Colorado Republicans, on the other hand, apply a heavy hand to the principles of the party. The American people have no whatever for the crazy noises that are to make up the creed of Populists, especially when the country is staring upon a new era of Republican prosperity.

Left Well Enough Alone.

Boston Herald recently had an article of cardiac. Discussing the do's and don'ts of the campaign, it said: "The most bright prospect of prosperity comes this fall, and we are confident that the prospect will be fully realized, as our countrymen have been fully informed to man among the odds of folly to be avoided. Herald name 'universal currency ease.' On this point it says:

"It regards the currency question, there are no exists for forcing it to the end under existing conditions. Our money system, kept as it is, is not to be blamed for the present depression, but it is to be blamed for not doing all it can to keep it secure for a number of years, but an adequate money, a decent money administration, and an adequate supply from the increase of volume of business, will overcome these conditions, and all of them, well within, the United States, will go along very well without plunged into the Congressional election by a party of subversive monetary experts."

It is good news, but it conflicts with article of the Houghton editor in general. As a rule those individuals who contend that the people were once in the first election and that currency reform was the most essential business candidate, Congress was much shamed for failing to legislate upon this question, although red editors knew perfectly well that the Senate divided as it is to-day there was no possible hope of successful action on the currency. The Herald now seems to have in the improved condition of business the force of the Republican contention that once the money was given legislation that would enable it to resume business operations, the currency question suggested originally a means of diverting attention from the Democratic tariff bill, would regulate itself.

New York Sun.

A Proceed for the Brown University Trustees.

The trustees of Brown University are not perhaps aware that in reelecting President Andrews from expounding the "no silver heresy" in that institution they are following a precedent set by two illustrious Presidents of the United States, Thomas Jefferson and James Madison, who then as statesmen were members of the Board of Trustees of the University of Virginia. The fact is shown by the following extract from a letter written in 1825:

"In most instances, text books are presented to each of the several schools in the form of donations, but this is generally done by authority of the trustees. I should not like to be compelled to the professional judgment of interference shall be given. But there are some which are the best judges, in which heresies may be taught, of so interlacing our State and to the United States, as to render it necessary to lay down the principles which are to be taught. It is that of government."

"All rights being withdrawn, we know not what may be. We may be, in that school of quidam's federation, consolidation, &c. to be compelled to the professional judgment of interference shall be given. But there are some which are the best judges, in which heresies may be taught, of so interlacing our State and to the United States, as to render it necessary to lay down the principles which are to be taught. It is that of government."

"All rights being withdrawn, we know not what may be. We may be, in that school of quidam's federation, consolidation, &c. to be compelled to the professional judgment of interference shall be given. But there are some which are the best judges, in which heresies may be taught, of so interlacing our State and to the United States, as to render it necessary to lay down the principles which are to be taught. It is that of government."

The resolution for which reference is made considered the text books and documents, such as the "Bible," Resolutions, that were to be studied in the university. Madison added to the list and observed that, "After all, the most effectual safeguard against heretical intrusion into the school of politics will be an able, and orthodox professor, whose course, of instruction, will be an example to his successors, and may carry with it a section from the "Bible."

On the hundred studies of law and history, Jefferson had finally positive opinions regarding the "text" books that should be used in the university of which he was the father. In the former branch he condemned the "England" of Menzies as "having more to stir up the free principles of the English Constitution than the largest standing army of which their patriots have been so jealous," and the study of which "had made an easy step to American tyrannism." In law, he reproached the "hypocrite Manufacturer of Blackstone," who was producing a book of "Tory lawyers" who no longer know what "Whigism" or "Liberalism" means, adding that "he is in our country that what verbal game is to be kept alive, it is then to be spread over, over, over, and the like."

Jefferson, it is true, has been censured by some modern critics for having in his patriotic air placed "limitations on political subdue," but his fundamental principle was that American young men should receive American training in the duties of citizenship. His central idea in the higher education was "to form the statesmen, legislators, and judges, on whom public prosperity and individual happiness are so much to depend; to expand the principles and structure of government, the laws which regulate the intercourse of nations, those formed municipally for our government, and a sound spirit of legislation, which, banishing all unnecessary restraint on individual action, shall leave us free to do whatever does not violate the rights of another." From every point of view these ideas are sound to-day as when they were written, and if they are not embodied in English law, are not embodied in the law, full as the English law is to the English people, the better will it be for the country.

It is to be regretted, as one of the dependents of President Andrew's law, that his defense of the passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of Jefferson's writings which he says that the University of Virginia will, to base on the "libitable freedom of the human mind" and that "they are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead." He may hold up to account as of the defense of President Andrew's law, but in his defense, that passage of

